Editorial Review

From Booklist

Funny is as funny does, and the writers in Frazier's zany anthology of amusement do humor exceptionally well. From the inimitable Roy Blount, Jr., to the irrepressible Bruce Jay Friedman, the wry Calvin Trillin to the withering David Sedaris, a veritable who's who of contemporary and classic humorists examine all manner of human frailty through a slightly skewed lens. The fact that sometimes the humans are not of this earth or are, oh, say, deceased, bloodthirsty conquerors, matters not at all. Frazier's point is that there is humor to be found everywhere. Indeed, his own "Lamentations of the Father," in which the rules of parenthood are laid down in the voice of the Almighty sets the standard for other laugh-inducing entries, such as Steve Martin's droll analysis of our new century in "The Third Millennium: So Far, So Good," and Simon Rich's clever adults-versus-children, table-turning scenario in "Play Nice." With an accessible balance of short slapstick and cerebral satire, Frazier's collection is good for more than a few laughs. --Carol Haggas
