Editorial Review

From Library Journal

This compendium of essays on current architectural theory and practice is an ambitious and comprehensive undertaking. Editors Farmer and Louw, both professors at the University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, have selected over 100 essays by noted architects, engineers, planners, and historians to examine the nature of contemporary architecture from a variety of perspectives. The essays themselves, which may be read either sequentially or selectively, are organized into six broad sections and cover a range of topics, from housing the poor to the history of wood roof trusses, from improving the walkability of cities to vernacular architecture. The insights are numerous; the cumulative effect is overwhelming. An important reference for libraries with architectural collections.

Review

'This compendium of essays on current architectural theory and practice is an ambitious and comprehensive undertaking ... the insights are numerous; the cumulative effect is overwhelming. An important reference for libraries with architectural collections.' - Library Journal

'This book will be a veritable gold-mine for architectural students. Considerable care has been taken over the making of this book: it is a handsome piece of book production, a pleasure to read and easy on the eye ... and it deserves to be, as it undoubtedly will be, widely read.' - Open House International

'No library that takes the subject of architecture seriously should be without it.' - SA Architect, Jan/Feb 2001
